Long ago, in the golden sands of Ancient Egypt, there lived a young falcon named Horus. He was no ordinary bird—Horus was destined to become the protector of his people. His father, Osiris, was the wise and just king of the gods, and his mother, Isis, was a kind and clever goddess. Together, they ruled in peace, but one day, their happiness was shattered.

Horus's uncle, Set, was jealous of Osiris's goodness and wanted to rule Egypt himself. Set did a terrible thing: he took Osiris away and declared himself king. The people of Egypt were sad and frightened, for Set was a cruel ruler who cared only for himself.
